SHORT COURSE HAS ONE WOMAN
Miss Alice Carl to Farm After Book-keeping for 20 Years.

The only woman enrolled in the Short Course in the College of Agriculture here is Miss Alice Carl of Oregon, Ill. After working as a book-keeper for twenty years, Miss Carl says she grew tired of always being in the employ of others and decided to become her own employer. Besides desiring independence, she

REALITY OF HISTORY IS BASIS FOR ACTION

Tense, nervous, energetic, quick sharp, yet having perfect control of the conversation—that is Dr. H. H. Powers, who recently gave a series of public addresses and private talks at the University. Whatever Doctor Powers talks about is interesting.

He was born, reared and educated in Wisconsin. He was graduated from the university of that state. Up to the time he began to travel, he was teacher of economics, first at Smith College, then at Leland Stanford University and later Cornell University. But he grew restive under the pedagogic regime, and founded the Bureau of University Travel more than twenty years ago. The aim in this bureau is to take students to the places where the facts of history have occurred. Though trips are made all around the world, the main place of study is Europe, principally in Italy and Greece.

Travels, Lectures and Writes.

For sixteen years he has attended only to the work connected with the travels. Before the war broke out he spent five months of the year in travel and the other seven in lecturing and writing. He made his last trip to the Orient in 1916.

But as much as Doctor Powers likes to move around to see things and lecture to willing ears, he is a home-loving man. "I always spend a few months of the year at my home in Boston," he said while here. He has two sons, one of whom is in Europe. This son is connected with the Associated Press. Before the war broke out he was in Germany, and since then has been on the border-line, but is now in Paris.

Last year Doctor Powers had intended to go on his travel, but the war changed his plans. "The war," he said, "gave a purpose and crystallization to my lectures that they had never had before. My theory has been always to give the historical realities of life, rather than to appeal to creations of the imagination. The war wanted more leisure in which to read, enjoy nature and travel. So she bought a small farm in Newton County, Mo., near Neosho, resigned her position and came to the University of Missouri to enroll in the Short Course to learn how to run her farm.

Miss Carl intends to come back here next winter to finish her course, and afterwards she will take possession of her farm. She intends to do as much of the work as she can herself. She is planning to raise strawberries, grapes, apples, chickens and a few hogs.

Miss Carl has never lived on a farm, but she thinks she will enjoy farm life immensely. "If country people retire and move to town," she says, "why shouldn't city people move to the country?"

Miss Carl is well satisfied with the course she is taking and thinks it of great practical value. Stock judging is the most difficult thing for her, because of her lack of experience in farm work. She laughingly says, "Whenever I place an animal right, the instructor doesn't agree and places it somewhere else."

Miss Carl tells of an examination in which she was asked to define "fetlock." "I carefully examined the picture of a horse," she said, "and the only thing I saw that looked like a lock was the tuft of hair over the eyes. So in my answer to the question, I located the fetlock above the eyes of the horse instead of on its foot. Immediately after the examination, I discovered my mistake; and soon I began to wonder why I had not been teased about it. Several weeks later I found out that the examination books had been destroyed before they were read because one of the young men in my class had the smallpox at the time they were written."

Miss Carl lives at 708 Missouri avenue, and the University girls who live in the house take an active interest in her and her farm. By combining the first letters of all their names they have coined the word "Bebkinfarm," which Miss Carl has chosen for the name of her farm.

gave me a chance to bring this message home to the people."

Believes Evolution Comes Naturally.

Doctor Powers believes in the "continuity of universal evolution." "Things must come about by natural and slow growth," he said. "We must not jump to do things of the imagination in matters of great moment. The day of no war will come, but it is not here now; I wish it were. There is a natural growth now toward universal peace and closer interest among nations. But these interests must not be sentimental. And it is on this interchange of real interests that the day of no war will come. Today, there are no independent nations; one is dependent on the other. This is what is making for the era of universal peace."

Doctor Powers is lecturing now under his own auspices but he is willing to address any audience that is eager to hear historical realities. Half the year he lectures around Boston, and the other part of the year he travels throughout the United States. He has spoken in thirty-five states and in a great many European cities. His lectures are mostly given before university bodies and educational organizations.

Differs With Council of Defense.

Though he has been asked to lecture for the National Council of Defense and other patriotic organizations Doctor Powers has declined their offers. "Their theories," he said, "do not harmonize with mine. They believe in the imaginative outlook of nations and I base mine on the realities of history. That is my purpose in giving my lectures: To make people think in terms of facts as they are and to act on the realities that exist. Doctor Powers has been asked to go to the camps of the Allies next May to speak to the soldiers. He is now on his way to the Pacific Coast. Although he had not intended to lecture on his way back, a few colleges have insisted that he do so, and he has consented."
